REPORT FROM DALLAS

February 8th, 2009 · 1 Comment

I'll be honest. Dallas has never been my first choice for a weekend jaunt. This year, however, Dallas and I are turning over a new leaf...

Not only has the Dallas Art Fair in its inaugural year turned out unbelievable crowds and an impressive lineup of exhibitors, the folks at the DAF have also made the process of participating in a fair as simple and painless as possible. For one, the fair is a manageable size, and staff support is strong. Second, it's home at the FIG not only houses the nicest art fair booths I've ever seen, it also nuzzles right up to the Dallas Museum of Art, providing a perfect launching point to other parts of the city. Finally, there remains a certain optimism in Dallas, regardless of the times, that just may preserve a place for the DAF in the Texas visual art landscape for years to come.

Here's to the final day! If you're able to make it, fair hours are from 12:00-5:00.

Note: readers opinions are always welcome. If you've been to the DAF - sound off!
